

Input

You have a craving to know more. Often you like to collect and archive all kinds of information. Your talent is valuable because it keeps your mind active and leads to more knowledge. You are an expert in something, even though you think you need to learn more.

General Academic Life

Schedule time for seeking information that goes beyond what is required for your classes. The library and the Internet will be valuable in your search.

Save all notes and books from previous classes to create a personal library.

You enjoy gathering information, possible even from reading a dictionary or encyclopedia.

Start a filing system for interesting and potentially useful articles you have read.

Study Techniques

Give yourself research deadlines within your overall timelines for completing papers. Without them, you might continue to read and read, never feeling like you have enough information.

To continue making progress and stay on track while doing required work, put sticky notes on areas you wish to go back and look at.

Prioritize the most critical information to study. Otherwise, you might become distracted by other information that fascinates you but is not as relevant.

Input

Relationships

Share your information with friends. Determine who would be interested in each bit of information, rather than giving all information to everyone.

Seek out professors who would be interested in knowing what you are learning and will find it stimulating to hear about the questions you are generating through your investigations.

Be aware that the more you know, the more likely it is that others will seek you out for information and see you as highly credible.

Class Selection

Select classes taught by professors who are well read and who keep up to date on the latest research in their fields.

Select classes that help you increase your general knowledge base. That would include classes in which research is valued.

Select classes in which class discussion is valued and in which you can share your ideas and the information that you have gleaned.

Extracurricular Activities

Become involved in extracurricular activities that further your learning, such as science clubs, language clubs, or literary organizations.

Join groups in which you can use your knowledge, such as community discussion groups, book clubs, and pre-law society mock trial groups.

Study about fascinating places to travel. Gather information, and go!
